Poignant Grandchild Dialogue — Grandchild: "Grandpa, what kind of work do you do?" Grandpa: "Well, let me start with this...everyone in our town, state, and even our country, pools their money. They put their money into a pool so that whenever one of them has a serious problem, like their house burned down or their car was wrecked, they can get money from the pool to help pay for their damages. Men and women like me make sure that anyone that needs money from the pool gets just the right amount...no more...or no less than what they're entitled to. So, men and woman like me are Guardians of the Pool."

The Grandchild paused, staring at Grandpa when suddenly, it was like a light bulb went off above his head...and he exclaimed "Coodd!"
